SATURDAY, APRIL 14.
Filth Diseases and Their Prevention.

Such is the title of a work by John Simon, M.
D., F. R. C. S., Chief Medical Officer of the Privy Council and of the Local Government Board of Great Britain. "First American edition of this book was printed under the direction of the State Board of Health of Massachusetts, and published in 1876, at Boston. From this edition we propose to make some extracts:

"It must be assumed that, even in large towns, authorities, exercising their discretion on skilled advice given to them, would sometimes prefer to oppose the local adoption of a system of water closets; and even if it is assumed that the number of such cases will eventually be small, yet, at least for the present, great importance attaches to the question of other means by which privy-nuisance in large towns can be prevented. And it is the more necessary that all such means should be well understood and as far as possible perfected, because permanently it must at any rate be the lot of many small towns and of most villages to depend on them rather than on water closets.

"In a former section of these observations I described at some length the extremely filthy and dangerous arrangements which frequently obtain for the disposal of excrement, and in places where water closets are not in use. Modern experience, however, has shown, and the fact is of the highest sanitary importance, that such arrangements are not the necessary alternative to a system of water closets; but that, failing a water system, both large and small populations can obtain under other and amended systems of privy management a complete and comparatively complete freedom from excremental nuisance and injury.

"Evidence to that effect was given five years ago in two most valuable papers which I had the honor of submitting to my Lords of the Council as appendices to my Twelfth Annual Report. The other conjointly by him and Mr. Netten Radcliffe on the privy-systems of various northern towns; and from that time till the present all the information collected in these two reports has been the basis of all advice which I have given in the matter to which they relate. Recently, under the Local Government Board, the present state of experience in the privy management of towns and nuisance-prevention has been made matter of new and large investigation by Mr. Netten Radcliffe; and I have the honor of submitting to you (App. No. 7) his comprehensive and thoroughly practical report on the subject.

"The improved systems which Mr. Netten Radcliffe describes attach universally with absolute such filthy catchment-provisions as I have referred to, and then, in order to meet the sanitary requirements provide more or less as follows:

"Privies: having as their aim that excremental matter, unaltered, shall be removed from the privies at so short intervals as not to have become offensive; and adopting as means to this end the use of movable receptacles, which systematically at short intervals are to be changed, clean for dirty by the scavenger; and which, for the prevention of nuisance in this process in the close-fitting air-tight lids to be applied to the
close-fitting air-tight lids to be applied to the

"Ash-Privies: wherein the professed purpose of the privy-country midden (to deodorize excrement by the action of the sun and air) is under strict precautionary conditions, accepted; the intention being, that the space beneath the privy-seat (but no further space) should be converted by careful masonry into a non-porous catchment-chamber, planned in slope and otherwise with particular reference to ease and frequency of systematic scavenging, and necessarily of but small size; and that into this chamber, empty direct to the exterior, the ashes of the house should be thrown, either down the hole of the seat, or with the seat hinged and lifting for the purpose, or otherwise.

"Earth-Privies: as introduced by the Rev. H.
Moore: purporting to effect under strictly defined conditions such applications of earth to excrement as shall render the latter inoffensive, forming with it a mass which not only can be removed to some place where it is to be processed, but can also, after being stored and dried, be used in the privy again and again with the same effect as new earth, and with some progressive increase of manurial value.

"Charcoal-Privies: intended to utilize, on the general plan of earth-privies, the still higher disinfectant power of charcoal, and thus to reduce to a minimum the quantity of disinfectant required; and purporting to have the further advantage that the excrements themselves can be made contributory to the supply of the charcoal.

"With general reference to the duty of filthprevention in inhabited areas, it is necessary to observe that the actual management of privies tends to become a function of local authorities; first, in proportion as they are of any kind are in use in their districts, and, secondly, in proportion as the districts contain dense settlements of ignorant and dirty populations.

"(a) "The duty of filth, if they are to be generally available in any populous district, must always be vigilantly superintended, or in most cases actually managed, by the Local Authority,
be removed to some place where it is to be processed, but can also, after being stored and dried, be used
of manurial value.

"(b) "Charcoal-Privies: intended to utilize, on the general plan of earth-privies, the still higher
required; and purporting to have the further
advantage that the excrements themselves can be
made contributory to the supply of the charcoal.

"(c) "The duty of filth, if they are to be generally available in any populous district, must
cases actually managed, by the Local Authority,
be removed to some place where it is to be processed, but can also, after being stored and dried, be used
of manurial value.

"(d) "Whenever privies of any kind are used in common by any families, or are for general public use, it is essential that the Local Authority should have then under constant supervision, and that (whether they are or are not of a sort to require scavenging of contents) the cleanliness of the privy itself should be systematically and strictly cared for. In cases where the use of the privy is common to all comers, servants of the Authority must of course keep it clean; and in cases where the use is common only to a defined group of houses or families, a definite understanding should be had as to the performance of the duty, either by the using families in regular rotation, or by their landlord or some one else on their joint behalf; and some appointed officer of the Authority must see strictly to the performance of the duty. Also in either case the privy must be protected against wilful damage, and wilful or negligent fouling; and vigilance should be used (particularly when the privies are first coming into local use) to detect, with a view to future prevention, any such abuses of the convenience."

The Rev. Adirondack Murray arraigns clubs as responsible for such things as the Bennett-Murray duel, and says: "Marryable girls and fond parents are beginning to discover what they would not believe a few years ago—that the tendency of these clubs is to demoralize society, and to the substitute for pleasant converse between man and woman a selfish devotion to cards and tobacco, injurious to the cultivation of the true social instinct, and tending to dull the nice edge of man's innate refinement." Mr. Murray, as the public are generally aware, "goes his pile" on horses.
